DEATH OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

This mournful event, a national bereavement in the strictest acceptation of the terms, took place at Walmer Castle, on the 14th September last. After a life of activity, privation, danger and glory, that a Southey or Macaulay are alone worthy to recount, His Grace had attained the venerable age of fourscore years and three: each successive year adding new claims to the gratitude and confidence of his Sovereign, and the love and admiration of his fellow-countrymen.

One of the strongest links that bound the People to the Throne is severed and broken; but the memory of the Duke of Wellington, embalmed in the living page of history, will serve in all time, as a stimulus and safeguard to the loyalty and patriotism of Britons. "Though dead he yet speaketh," in an authoritative and persuasive voice, as in the following extract from the London "Times," which we consider worthy of the man and the occasion:—

England upon the death of her greatest son, it is the recollection that the life which has just closed leaves no duty incomplete and no honour unbestowed. The Duke of Wellington had exhausted nature and exhausted glory. His career was one unclouded longest day, filled from dawn to nightfall with renowned actions, animated by unfailing energy in the public service, guided by unswerving principles of conduct and of statesmanship. He rose by a rapid series of achievements which none had surpassed to a position which no other man in this nation ever enjoyed. The place occupied by the Duke of Wellington in the councils of the country and in the life of Europe was one no more be filled. There is none left in the army or the senate to act and speak with like authority. There is none with whom the valour and the worth of this nation were so incorporate. Yet, when we consider the fulness of his years and the abundance of his incessant services, we may learn to say with the Roman orator, "Satis diu vixisse decius," since, being mortal, nothing could be added either to our veneration or to his fame. Nature herself had seemed for a time to expand her inexorable limits, and the infirmities of age to lay a lighter burden on that honoured head. Generations of men had passed away between the first exploits of his arms and the last counsels of his wisdom. He is a lot unexampled in history, the man who had played the most conspicuous part in the annals of more than half a century became the last survivor of his contemporaries, and carries with him to the grave all living memory of his own achievements. To what a century, to what a country, to what achievements was that life successfully dedicated! For its prodigious duration—for the multiplicity of contemporary changes and events, far outnumbering the course of its days and years—for the invariable and unbroken stream of success which attended it, from its commencement to its close, from the first flash of triumphant valour in Indian war to that senatorial wisdom on which the Sovereign and the nation hung for counsel to its latest hour—for the unbending firmness of character which bore alike all labour and all prosperity—and for the single attachment to the same objects, the same principles, the same duties, undisturbed by the passions of youth, and unrelaxed by the honours and enjoyments of peace and of age —the life of the Duke of Wellington stands alone in history. In him, at least, posterity will trace a character superior to the highest and most distinguished gifts of fortune. If the word "heroism" can be not unfairly applied to him, it is because he remained greater than his own prosperity, and rose above the temptations by which other men of equal genius, but less self-government, have fallen below their destinies. His life has nothing to gain from the language of panegyric, which would compare his military exploits or his civil statesmanship with the prowess of an Alexander or a Cæsar, or with the astonishing career of him who saw his empire overthrown by the British general at Waterloo. They were the offspring of passion and of genius, flung from the volcanic depths of revolutions and of civil war, to sweep with meteoric splendour across the earth, and to collapse in darkness before half the work of life was done. Their violence, their ambition, their romantic existence, their reverses, and their crimes will for ever fascinate the interest of mankind, and constitute the secret of their fame, if not of their greatness. To such attractions the life and character of the Duke of Wellington present no analogy. If he rose to scarce inferior renown, it was by none of the passions or the arts which they indulged or employed. Unvanquished in the field, his sword was never drawn for territorial conquest, but for the independence of Europe and the salvation of his country. Raised by the universal gratitude of Europe and of this nation to the highest point of rank and power which a subject of the British monarchy could attain, he wore those dignities and he used that influence within the ancient limits of a subject's duty. No law was ever twisted to his will, no right was ever sacrificed by one hair's breadth for his aggrandisement. There lived not a man either among his countrymen or his antagonists who could say that this great duke had wronged him; for his entire existence was devoted to the cause of legal authority and regulated power. You seek in it in vain for those strokes of audacious enterprise which in other great captains, his rivals in fame, have sometimes won the prize of crowns or turned the fate of nations. But his whole career shines conspicuous in not moving to interpret of the flexible organs of history. Everything in it is manly, compact, and clear; shaped to one rule of public duty, animated by one passion—the love of England and the service of the crown. The Duke of Wellington lived, commanded, and governed in unconscious indifference or disdainful aversion to those common incentives of human action, which are derived from the powers of imagination and of sentiment. He held them cheap, both in their weakness and in their strength. The force and weight of his character stooped to no such adventitious influences. He might have kindled more enthusiasm, especially in the early and doubtful days of his Peninsular career; but in his successful and triumphant pursuit of glory her name never passed his lips, even in his addresses to his soldiers. His entire nature and character were moulded on reality. He lived to see things as they were. His acute glance and cool judgment pierced at once through the surface which entangles the imagination or kindles the sympathy of the feelings. Truth, he loved her, is to be reached by a rougher path and by sterner minds. In war, in politics, and in the common transactions of life, the Duke of Wellington adhered tardily to the most precise correctness in word and deed—a temperament abhorred disguises and despised exaggerations. The fearlessness of his actions was never the result of speculative confidence or foolhardy presumption, but it lay mainly in a just perception of the true relation in which he stood to his antagonists in the field or in the senate. The greatest exploits of his life, such as the passage of the Douro, followed by the march on Madrid, the battle of Waterloo, and the passing the Catholic Relief Bill, were performed under no circumstances that could inspire enthusiasm. Nothing but the coolness of the player could have won the mighty stakes upon a cast apparently so adverse to his success. Other considerations have attained the highest pitch of glory when they disposed of the colossal resources of empires, and headed armies already flushed with the conquest of the world. The Duke of Wellington found no such encouragement in any part of his career. At no time were the means at his disposal adequate to the ready and certain execution of his designs. A steady progress in the Peninsular campaigns went on against the current of fortune, till that current was itself turned by perseverance and resolution. He had a power of complete perception of the dangers he encountered, but he saw and grasped the latent power which baffled those dangers, and surmounted resistances apparently invincible. That is precisely the highest degree of courage, for it is courage conscious, enlightened, and determined. Clearness of discernment, correctness of judgment, and rectitude in action were, without doubt, the principal elements of the duke's brilliant achievements in war, and of his vast authority in the councils of his country, as well as in the conferences of Europe. They gave to his determinations an originality and vigour akin to that of genius, and sometimes imparted to his language in debate a pith and significance at which more brilliant orators failed to arrive. His mind, equally careless of obstacles and of effect, travelled by the shortest road to its end; and he retained, even in his latest years, all the precision with which he was wont to handle the subjects that came before him, or had at any time engrossed his attention. This was the secret of that untaught manliness and simplicity of style that pervades the vast collection of his despatches, written as they were amidst the varied cares and emotions of war; and of that lucid and appropriate mode of exposition which never failed to leave a clear impression on the minds of those whom he addressed. Other men have enjoyed, even in this age, more vivid faculties of invention and contrivance, a more extended range of foresight, a more subtle comprehension of the changing laws of society and the world. But the value of these finer perceptions, and of the policy founded upon them, has never been more assured than when it was tried and admitted by the wisdom and patriotism of that venerable mind. His superiority over other men consisted rather in the perfection of those qualities which he pre-eminently possessed than in the variety or extent of his other faculties. Those powers, which were unerring when applied to definite and certain facts, sometimes failed in the appreciation of causes which had not hitherto come under their observation. It is, perhaps, less to be wondered at that the soldier and the statesman of 1815, born and bred in the highest school of tory politics, should have miscarried in his [illegible] than that the defended opponent of reform in 1831 should have risen into the patriot senator of 1846 and 1851. Yet the administration of 1828, in which the Duke of Wellington occupied the first and most responsible place, passed the Catholic Emancipation Act, and thereby gave the signal of a rupture in the tory party, never afterwards entirely healed, and struck the heaviest blow on a system which the growing energies of the nation resented and condemned. Resolute to oppose what he conceived to be popular clamour, no man ever recognised with more fidelity the claims of a free nation to the gradual development of its interests and its rights; nor were his services to the cause of liberty and improvement the less remarkable because they usually consisted in bending the will or disarming the prejudices of their fiercest opponents. Attached by birth, by character, and by opinion to the cause and the cause of the British aristocracy, the Duke of Wellington knew that the true power of that race of nobles lies, in this age of the world, in their inviolable attachment to constitutional principles, and their honest recognition of popular rights. Although his personal resolution and his military experience qualified him better than any other man for the champion of resistance to popular turbulence and sedition, as he showed by his preparations in May, 1832, and in April, 1848, yet within and legal clearance were ever the handmaidens of his courage, and, while most firmly determined to defend, if necessary, the authority of the state, he was the first to set an example of conciliatory sacrifice to the reasonable claims of the nation. He was the Catulus of our Senate, after having been our Cæsar in the field; and, if the commonwealth of England had ever adopted one of her citizens with the Roman title of Parens Patriæ, that touching honour would have been added to the peerage and the baton of Arthur Wellesley by the respectful gratitude and faith of the people. Though singularly free from every trace of cant, his mind was no stranger to the sublime influence of religious truth, and he was assiduous in the observances of the public ritual of the church of England. At times even in the extreme period of his age, some accident would betray the deep current of feeling which he never ceased to entertain towards all that was chivalrous and benevolent. His charities were unostentatious but extensive, and he looked with intense interest without life upon an incredible number of persons and things which claimed his notice and solicited his aid. Every social duty, every ceremony, every mourning, found him ready to take his part in it. He had a smile for the youngest child, a compliment for the prettiest face, an answer to the readiest tongue, and a lively interest in every incident of life, which it seemed beyond the power of age to chill. When time had somewhat relaxed the sterner mould of his manhood, its effects were chiefly indicated by an unabated taste for the amusements of fashionable society, incongruous at times with the dignity of extreme old age, and the recollections of so virile a career. But it seemed a part of the duke's character that everything that presented itself was equally welcome, for he had become a part of everything, and it was foreign to his nature to stand aloof from any occurrence to which his presence could contribute. He swung round to the last the flagging spirit or the reluctant step of indolence or ennui, or to have recoiled from anything that remained to be done; and this complete performance of every duty, however small, as long as life remained, was the same quality which had carried him in triumph through his campaigns, and raised him to be one of the chief ministers of England and an arbiter of the fate of Europe. It has been said that in the most active and illustrious lives there comes at last some inevitable hour of melancholy and of satiety. Upon the Duke of Wellington that hour left no impression, and probably it never shed its influence over him; for he never rested on his former achievements or his length of days, but marched onwards to the end, still heading the youthful generations which had sprung into life around him, and scarcely less intent than their purest hits they are themselves. It was a finely balanced mind to have worn so well. When men in after times shall look back to the annals of England for examples of energy and public virtue among those who have raised this country to her station on the earth, no name will remain more conspicuous or more unsullied than that of Arthur Wellesley, the great Duke of Wellington. The actions of his life were extraordinary, but his character was more remarkable still. It was the very [illegible] in its originality; and, though men are prone to invest the worthies of former ages with a dignity and merit they commonly withhold from their contemporaries, we can select none from the long array of our captains and our nobles who, taken for all in all, can challenge a parallel with him who is gone from amongst us, an inheritor of imperishable fame.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

To the Editor of the British Packet.

Prefaces to communications addressed to a weekly paper should be dispensed with, be short, but before asking the attention of your readers to the infant society, whose title I have given above, allow me to make one observation with respect to the flowery notice of its recent concert by the Post-Editor of the "Nacional." In his enthusiastic delight at the brilliancy of the scene, he seems to have entirely passed over the claims of the fair foreigners upon his notice, and although we render due honor to the charms of his country women, we are not content that he should lead his readers to suppose that no exotics were mingled with native plants, in the parterre which he has so rapturously described.

If success be the criterion by which the merits of the Society are to be judged, then the Directors must be fully satisfied that their exertions have not been misapplied, and the leader, Mr. Marotta, may congratulate himself upon the ability and intelligence of the choir, the results of which so greatly pleased those who were fortunate enough to be present at the concert of the 18th. The pieces selected for the choruses were of an effective character, and executed with considerable precision and emphasis—in any part of the world the performance would have been highly creditable, composed as the society is chiefly of amateurs, and there is ample cause for encouragement to those engaged in the work—certain if they carry with them the best wishes of all who really desire to see good institutions flourish amongst us, and especially where, as in the present case, natives of the country and foreigners are placed upon the same footing, and mingle on the most intimate footing. We would desire to speak of the advantages of the society in this respect, but dare not trespass much further.

The solos, duets, trios and quartetts were not all of equal merit, but all were of a pleasing character, and in one or two instances of very great excellence, calling forth as much applause as was deemed appropriate by the extremely orderly and well behaved audience. Interspersed with the vocal pieces were several duets for the Piano with the flute, violin and concert a-piston, all of which were very beautiful, and evidently practised to with great pleasure. The rooms, which had been altered and fitted up plainly but tastefully, were well filled, and the concert which began at 9 o'clock was finished at one —even this unusual length being unattended with any signs of weariness by the spectators.

As a whole we have not had many such evenings in Buenos Ayres for years past, and gladly learn that it is the intention of the society to give a monthly concert if possible. The assembly was honored by the presence of the Governor of the Province and family, and by many distinguished persons, both native and foreign.

Your very truly,
PETAPECO.

Financial Prospects.

Under this head we had the pleasure of seeing some remarks in the "Packet" of the 13th inst. by which our attention was attracted, particularly so however by the concluding paragraphs, commenting upon Señor Peña's late change in the rate of interest on the existing treasury bills.

All those who wish well to the Province of Buenos Ayres must regret to learn that those remarks were founded solely upon the score of justice, which actuated the editor of the "Packet," and that the Minister had been influenced by motives very different from those ascribed to him.

We desire to speak upon this subject calmly but justly, and in justice we cannot but condemn strongly the course pursued. No attempt has been made to find out from the holders of these bills, whether they would willingly consent to a reduction of the high rate so long paid.

No attempt has been made to pay off those who might be unwilling to continue the loan at a rate below that which rules in the market.

No attempt has been made at conciliation of any kind.

The same power which has arbitrarily reduced the rate of interest to one third of what has been heretofore paid may reduce it to one sixth to-morrow, and to nothing the next day.

A loan, which could easily have been procured last month at a moderate rate of interest, is now rendered impossible, and the credit of the Government has been deeply injured at a saving of $60,000 monthly.

We trust that measures may yet be repealed, and that the well-wishers of the present government may not be disappointed by a continuance of this novel measure of finance.

POLITICAL RETROSPECT.

"Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more!" may sound rather ominous as the preamble to a commercial retrospect; yet such is the dire fatality of these young times, is the necessary, the inevitable consequence. Our local demand for the past month has been languid, and may be expected to continue so, till the uncertainty that envelops our political horizon is dissipated. A political summit continues to be despatched for Paraguay; and, contrary to expectation, our good friends, the Entre Rianos, have favoured us with their counsels to a greater extent than the policy and predilections of the assumed National Director could have justified us in anticipating. With the other interior Provinces our intercourse is all but suspended, and their share in business matters may be set down at zero.

Amidst all these fast recurring vicissitudes, the credit and confidence of the Buenos Ayrean market continue buoyant; and the prospect of settled peace and tranquility is alone wanted to put the machine in active and effective motion. Our money market has been comparatively tranquil; and the pending liabilities are met in a satisfactory manner.

Imports, we fear, are larger than the actual necessities or immediate prospects of the market justify; but the deposit system is now in full operation, which may relieve parties who want money, only for the better times that are doubtless in store for us.

Exports.—Of the superior classes of ox and cow hides the supply is inadequate, and prices rule high. Lighter weights are more abundant, and in fair demand. We expected rather a large supply from the Province of Entre Rios, but the events taking place there must derange for a time the march of industry and the course of trade.

Our wool market has opened auspiciously for the growers; and we have heard of contracts for superior washed wools, at which we consider high figures. More than a fair average, and in superior condition, may be expected this year from the River Plate; in a season of ample compensation, we trust, for the rumoured and anticipated deficiencies of the Australian market. If the present prices are maintained, we have no doubt that wool-growing in the Province of Buenos Ayres may become quite as lucrative, and more inviting to the sober-minded and industrious, than the gold diggings of California or New South Wales.

Our shipping list presents a heavy amount of tonnage in port; and though several vessels have latterly gone in ballast, to push their fortunes elsewhere, the immediate prospects for those that remain are not by any means cheering. Heavy freight to trim is the great want; of bales and light freight, the quantity is likely to be very considerable. Rates of freight can hardly rally, with the present competition.

The weather, though rather unsettled, is genial and seasonable, and it is allowed on all hands that our camps never presented a more luxuriant aspect. Thank God, we have every prospect of abundance for man and beast.

Political Aspect.—As regards commercial interests, the immediate prospects are gloomy and uncertain. A new struggle is fairly initiated, and much will depend on its character, duration and result; points on which it would be absurd, at the present stage, to hazard any dogmatical predictions.

The latest official news, Bulletin No. 2, are of a mixt character; the simultaneous triumph of General Hornos, and repulse of General Madariaga, on the 21st Instant, partly neutralizing each other. The document referred to, however, is too meagre to enable us to appreciate either of the events in its effects or tendencies; but, to dispose of the unwelcome part first, there is no doubt that the small but brilliant division of Correntino infantry, headed by General Madariaga, remains in the mean time hors du Combat; and, however poignant our regret, justice requires that we suspend our judgment, till its gallant but unfortunate leader has had an opportunity of stating his case.

Posterior information, gleaned from reliable private sources, represent the position of General Hornos in a very different light. With his characteristic daring, he has penetrated, it would have not with a feeble resistance if not a cordial reception; for had the combined resources, once wielded by his opponent been brought to bear on the Spartan band, resistance or escape was next to impossible. Our first news of the indomitable veteran may perhaps announce his arrival at the Diamante, in direct communication with General ——, in which case we need have no misgivings as to the speedy and successful issue of the campaign. As a collateral guarantee, Colonel Caceres, with a strong Corrocitini division, is understood to have entered by the north; so that the Provisional Director is hemmed in on all sides, with his enemies at hand, and his allies at a distance.

All these causes, coupled with the discontent known to pervade the Province of Entre-Rios, and the unanimity and enthusiasm that we have witnessed here during these last few days, warrant the anticipation of a moral and social triumph, that will open a new era to foreign commerce, and the highest interests of these communities.

Recapitulation.—In our statement for Oct. the following cargo was misentered for France instead of Germany; viz 9,070 dry ox and cow hides; 4,593, salted do.; 97 bales wool, and 5,000 horns; which parties interested will please to deduct and add accordingly under their respective heads: the total for Oct. and the grand total for the current year require no alteration.

BUENOS AYRES.

Finding it impossible to meet all the legislative claims on our space, we have decided to publish a Supplement, or Extra Number, on the day preceding the sailing of the British Mail Packet. Said number will contain the celebrated "Letter of Don F. Sarmiento to General Urquiza," with the latest news that may transpire between this and the day of publication.—

Parties interested will find said number at our Office, No. 20, Calle San Martin; price $5 each.

Incidents of the week.—After shutting out our weekly synopsis of Official Documents and a translation of the Bulletin No. 1, both in type, we can only allude to the installation of the School of Medicine, and the reopening of the Foundling Hospital; both august and imposing ceremonies, presided by H. E. the Governor in person, and enlivened by eloquent and patriotic addresses, that reflect imperishable honor on our good City, and point to a brighter era of progress and civilization.

Return of the Transports.—On Thursday evening, the appearance of the transports that had conveyed the late expedition, excited a sensation of intense anxiety, mingled with feelings of disappointment and chagrin. On loading it was found that they had brought to this port some 35 wounded, in the unsuccessful attack on the Arroyo de la China on the 21st., having disembarked 200 infantry at Martin Garcia. As some compensation, the triumps of General Hornos are confirmed; though contrary to the opinion we have given in the conclusion of our retrospect, the prevailing opinion seems to be that he has made for the Correntino frontier, to form a junction with Colonel Cáceres. Whether his route may be east or west, the best wishes of the Buenos Ayrean community accompany him.

National Guard.—A reinforcement of 400 men being required for San Nicolas de los Arroyos, the appeal was made to the National Guards of the Capital, and responded to with the noblest decision and patriotic enthusiasm. In little more than two days, all all the necessary preparations were made; and yesterday about noon the gallant Volunteers embarked, amid the plaudits and prayers of the most eminent respectability assembled on the daily increasing prestige of the Government. When the people embrace their own cause their definitive triumph is inevitable. The capitalist and the merchant, the senator and the employé, the stripling and the hoary patriot,—representing the wealth, the worth and the intelligence of Buenos Ayres, now occupy the advanced post in the National cause; and should the fortunes of war place them in danger, thousands and thousands more are ready and eager to rush to the rescue.

Dry River Plate Hides.—In the absence of supplies no transactions have taken place since our last issue. The market, however, is very good and full prices could readily be obtained. A parcel of 551 coarse bull Hides from the Continent are now being landed.

Salted River Plate Hides.—The market throughout the month has been very firm and improving. The imports have been very limited and have not afforded a supply of suitable qualities commensurate with the demand for the home trade. Our extreme quotations, however of last month have not as yet been exceeded, but for really good Hides advanced prices could be easily obtained, as the extent of the demand has not been so brisk at current rates, in short shipments are returning from the Continent. Our quotations are 42d to 42d for good heavy Ox, 42d to 43d for average to middling ditto, 43d for light Ox, and 38d to 40d per lb. for Cows.

Horse Hides.—There has been more disposition to purchase than for some time past, and good Hides of heavy averages have been enquired for. The only sales to notice are for Salted Rio Grande, av. 20½ lbs. at 5s 6d, av. 22 lbs. at 5s 9d, and av. 23½ lbs. at 4s 6d, damaged and small at 2 9d to 4s 6d. Cuttings and Slips at 1s 6d to 2s 6d each.

Chinchilla Skins.—At the Fur sales 38,6[illegible] skins were sold as follows: fair colours to grey mark at 3[illegible]d to 42s 6d, middling and pale 2[illegible] to 34s 9d, damaged 16s to 24s, stained 4s to 11s, Bastards 7s to 9s per dozen. No imp[illegible]

s, Bones & Hoofs.—The sales are 15 tons New South Wales Shank at £8 5s to £11; common £4 5s per ton. 117 tons South American perished Shanks at £4 10s to £5 10s, common £4 to £4 5s per ton. 20 tons Cape, common, £4 to £4 5s per ton. 5 tons Buenos Ayres Hoofs at £7 10s, and 4 tons New South Wales do. at £6 10s per ton.

Horse Hair.—The best descriptions have been in good demand, medium and low qualities rather dull. The following sales have been effected at about late rates—60 bales and 108 bags of seconds, viz.: White and Grey Cut Tails fair lengths at 2s 9d to 3s 6d, milling and 10½d, Cut Tails good lengths 2s 2½d to 2s 3¼d, do. midling to fair 1s 3d to 1s 4d, do. short 10½d to 1s 1½d, fair to good mixed 8½d to 10d, slight mixed and short to 6¾d, Columbova Plaits middling 7¼d per lb. Import 124 packages.

The Tallow Market throughout the month has been in a very unsettled and buoyant condition. The holders of Russian have continued to evince much firmness, and the arrivals from St. Petersburgh to this date are short of previous years. The weather also has proved favorable for the operations of Chandlers. These circumstances combined have created much activity in the marked and a large business has been transacted at improved rates; orders having been received here and at St. Petersburgh for the United States for considerable quantities also caused some excitement, and prices since our last month's report have advanced 2s per cwt.

River Plate Tallow has participated in the general demand during the month. The sales have gone off well, although the quality has been rather inferior. In our circular of June last we alluded to the probability of higher prices being obtained in the autumn; it will be perceived that our conjectures were correct. The highest prices obtained for fair colour firm have been 40s 9d to 41s per cwt. which must now be considered its value, middling colour firm, 40s to 40s 3d; rather dark to dark 38s down to 36s per cwt. being an advance of 2s per cwt. since our last month's issue, and 5s per cwt. above prices current in June. The Import of the month amounts to 465 casks and 68 boxes. The sales have been 1600 casks 846 boxes. The present Stock is 750 casks and 500 boxes.
